

Twitter:

Transportation costs make up nearly half of what VT households pay for energy, according to a new study from @EfficiencyVermont. Heating costs are the next biggest expense, followed by electricity. Read more from the 2019 Energy Burden Report: www.encyvermont.com/Vermont-energy-burden

Vermont households spend, on average, 10% of their income on energy costs for transportation, heating, and electricity. A new report from @EfficiencyVermont looks at how energy burden varies by town and programs that can help reduce it: www.encyvermont.com/Vermont-energy-burden

On average, Vermonters spend over $2,500 per household on transportation fuels alone. That makes up 45% of energy related expenses, according to a new report from @EfficiencyVermont on energy burden: www.encyvermont.com/Vermont-energy-burden

Facebook:

Do you know what you spend on energy? A new report from @Efficiency Vermont dives into energy burden: household spending on energy as a percentage of income. The report finds that on average, Vermonters spend 45% of their energy costs on transportation fuels, followed by 35% on heating, and 20% on electricity. Read more: www.encyvermont.com/Vermont-energy-burden

Energy burden helps uncover the impact of energy costs on a household by expressing costs as a percentage of household income. A new report from @Efficiency Vermont analyses energy burden town by town to understand which communities have a high proportion of households who are challenged by energy costs. Read more: www.encyvermont.com/Vermont-energy-burden